

Clubs and associations

Clubs and associations come in many forms and exist for a variety of reasons. Some clubs and associations hold special status – for example as a community amateur sports club or a charity. They fulfil many different purposes - some are private membership organisations, established for sporting or recreational purposes, others are leading institutions in fields like medicine and science. Also, many professional bodies and trade organisations are unincorporated associations.

Few committee members or club members realise the difficulties and dangers for their club or association if it is unincorporated and most do not realise their own risks of personal liability. In addition, clubs and associations also often face special challenges over membership and constitutional issues. We are here to help you understand, assess and address these issues in an informed way, and to offer practical solutions.

Whatever your needs and interests, do contact us to discuss how we can help you.
